The Quentins

Lots of people know Oxford's prog maestros The Aureate Act, but not so many people know that a couple of them are also in a spicy new wave/indie band called The Quentins who are equally kicking. Chiming, bouncy, occasionally dirty-ass funky, this is a cracking band with whom to spend a humid summer night.

Blushes

Blushes are an Aylesbury act who claim they spread "Marmitey feelings". If they mean people love them or hate them, we think they're half right: who could hate this lovely urban-tinged indie pop, which feels like a sun-drenched drive along an open highway and a refreshing spring rain in an English meadow simultaneously?

Rose Segal

Gorgeous acoustic songs that ooze positivity and charm from Rose, backed with some jazz-inflected double bass and percussion. If you like your music feather-light and poetic, look no further, pull up a passing cloud, and enjoy.
