Echo4Four

Reliable Oxford rockers Echo4Four have been known for a good few years for their rousing rhythms, their ear for a chunky no-prisoners-taken melody, and their infectiously energetic stage shows. Their gigs are relatively rare occurrences nowadays, so don't pass up the chance for a close and sweaty interaction with them.

Noise Lock

London and Oxford band Noise Lock merges a furious blend of industrial hip hop and punk into a chaotic, yet futuristic, sonic barrage that could be considered as the twisted love-child of Death Grips, Massive Attack and Show Me The Body. Relentless thumping of drums are topped by eerie, cavernous guitars and frenetic, sub-weighted electronics to deliver an industrial smackdown.

BarrelHaus

Little Red and Master Of None have supplied Gappy audiences with two very different sounds, and now Ian Mitchell and Marc Challans are back with yet another great outfit, a full-throttle rock duo whose music fair barrels along (logically enough). Influenced by blues, alt rock, and being as loud as possible, they'll bring the riffs if you bring the bangable heads!
